2. Holy Cross Lutheran School (3636 Ohio) The school had its beginnings as a branch school of Trinity Lutheran Church (1850). First, the August Tschierpe home (3514 South Jefferson) housed teacher Henry Erck (from 1850 to 1897) and a room in the Purfuerst Home (3666 Miami) was used for classes. Then College Professor Adolph Biewend offered his attic (Broadway and Stanbury) as a classroom. In 1851 classes moved to the Zepf home (3550 Clara, Texas). The first school building was completed in the summer of 1851 at the site of the College Annex. Miss von Lahr was called as a second teacher in 1866. A new building (Ohio and Potomac) was constructed in 1872. In 1952 the 5th grade was added. A larger 6 room school was constructed in 1897 (3636 Ohio) but was destroyed by fire on October 30, 1913. The present school building was dedicated on September 20, 1914. That year Kindergarten classes were added and the school became fully accredited. Instruction in German ended in 1917. Regular chapel services began in 1963. The school closed around 2002. Currently the school building is home to the Institute Art Center.

3. Concordia College/Concordia Seminary (3641 South Jefferson at Wllmengen) The cornerstone was laid on November 3, 1884. The dedication of the south wing of the college building was June 11, 1885 with singing of “Tannis Des Knaben” and “Hymn to Healing.” Addresses were given in German (Wydenko and Schiferdecker) and Latin (Walther). Subsequently, the north wing (1885) and connecting section (1885) were added. All buildings were razed in 1882 and a new 90-room college was constructed and dedicated on September 2, 1893. The College later moved its present 72-acre location in Clayton (dedicated on June 13, 1926).

4. Concordia College Recitation Annex / Holy Cross Parish Hall (3636 Clara/Texas) The only seminary building remaining today, the Recitation Annex was dedicated on October 29, 1907. The second floor included one larger and two smaller lecture halls. Most recently the building had been a home for Orphan Grain Train.

5. C. F. W. Walther House (3652 Clara/Texas) This house served as home for Dr. C. F. W. Walther from 1870 until his death 17 years later—he previously lived on Poplar Street, between First and Second Avenue (1840–1850) and then in a 42’ x 50’ section of the first floor of the Concordia College building (1850–1870). After Walther’s death the house was occupied by Professor Guenther (1887–1893) and Professor Stockhard (1893–1904). Reports have the building razed either at the time of the building of the annex or in the late 1960s / early 1970s.

6. “Seminary Professor Row” Many of the homes of Concordia College professors were clustered in the Holy Cross and Concordia College neighborhood. Below are some of the immediate residents.

Louis Lange Publishing House (Miami and 3600 Clara/Texas) Best known for his bi-weekly “Die Amsendire” Louis Lange was instrumental in the creation and administration of Concordia Publishing House. Large Publishing House began in the 1860s; sections of the building may very well constitute the oldest non-church structure extant in St. Louis.

8. Concordia Publishing House (Concordia Verlag) (3559 South Jefferson at Miami) While C. F. W. Walther used a New York printer for Trinity Lutheran’s Hymnbook (1847) and a variety of printers during the early days of Der Lutheraner (Weber and Joachim, Wieschor), Synodaldruckerei was used in 1857. Facilities were first housed at Concordia College (1867). Certificate of Stock were advertised in Der Lutheraner October 15, 1869. A Board of Directors was created on September 11, and the cornerstone was laid on the seminary grounds on October 21 that same year. The dedication of the first “Sonderdruckerei” occurred on February 6, 1870 with Walther preaching, music by the brass band of Immanuel Lutheran and singing by the Seminarian Choir during a service in Holy Cross. That same year the first annual LCMS pastor and teacher directory was published. A new 4-story building on Indiana and Miami was completed in 1874 (with an annex added in 1888, the same year CPH took over publication of The Lutheran Witness). Concordia Publishing House was incorporated on May 28, 1891 and began construction at its present site in 1893. It received an award for excellence and craftsmanship at the 1904 World’s Fair. German-language Sunday School materials were discontinued in 1920. Der Lutheraner ceased publication in 1974. Computer data entry system installed in 1972.

The hospital moved to Seventh and Sidney in 1865. Later the home of Christian Lange (Ohio and Potomac) was purchased (dedicated on September 4, 1883). The Lutheran School of Nursing was founded in 1898 and continues today at 3474 South Jefferson, across from CPH. Lutheran hospital was sold in 1984 and now operates under the name St. Alexius Hospital.
